- PSYC 101. Introduction to Psychology.

⁸ INTG 3xx. Reflections Courses. The turn outward represented by Global Perspectives is balanced in Reflections by a turn inward to consideration of personal values. As in Global Perspectives we ask students in Reflections courses to analyze familiar and unfamiliar systems of thought and belief, but this time in order to explore their own and others' ideas about the ultimate meaning and purposes of our lives. Because inquiry about human values can occur in a variety of disciplinary contexts, our students may choose in their third year from a menu of courses representing philosophical, religious, artistic, and scientific perspectives. Yet each course in its own way addresses foundational questions, linking provisional answers to descriptions of ethical conduct and an examined life. Other courses are being added. The following courses are approved and listed as of the 2007-2008.

- INTG 301. : Spirit and Story.
- INTG 302. : The Pursuit of Well-Being
- INTG 303. : Bodies, Nature, Power.
